

october inspiration... Maya Lin - a river is a drawing

I am continually inspired by the power of the universe and the creative process of tapping into the right ideas at the right time. Leonardo Da Vinci, the great artist and scientist said, "Artists are able to see what others can only catch glimpses of." Maya Lin has always been that type of artist. She observes, she thinks and she connects the dots. With her hyper-focused observations, she is able to see and create a story that we, as observers, have yet to explore. Her visual voice is a soft whisper as it hits all the right notes and speaks to us in a language we can understand.

The Maya Lin exhibit at the Hudson River Museum, Maya Lin: A River is a Drawing is an ode to that great body of water, the Hudson River. This powerful natural resource has sustained life along its shores for hundreds of years. Now we have an opportunity to see and discover much more than just a glimpse. If you think you know this river, think again. Make a trip up the Hudson river to the Hudson River Museum and see and feel it's magic. Click here to read the New York Times review
